Population:
The program is intended for students who would like to improve their academic English language skills before beginning their graduate studies. Applicants should hold undergraduate/graduate degrees, or should be currently enrolled in a graduate program.

Schedule:
Sundays, Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays:
08:30-10:00; 10:30-12:00; 14:00-16:00

Tuesdays: Enriching program (Contemporary Israeli Studies Seminar)

Program Overview:
The program focuses on reading, writing, listening, and speaking skills in academic contexts. The purpose of the program is to develop critical reading and analysis of research articles; to develop strategies for planning, composing, revising, editing, and using sources in writing; and to help students develop the ability to communicate in English for academic purposes.

Topics Covered:
- Identifying structure and types of academic articles
- Identifying main idea, purpose and conclusion of articles
- Recognizing paragraph structure: main ideas and supporting details
- Building simple, compound and complex sentences
- Writing a summary, an outline and a reaction-response paragraph
- Editing paragraphs and paraphrasing
- Using transitions and other structural and stylistic devices
- Preparing and delivering oral presentations

The courses are taught by qualified and experienced teachers who specialize in teaching English as a Foreign Language for Academic Purposes.

Tuition: 2,000$ for the four-week-program; 100$ registration fee prior to April 1st; 200$ registration fee April 1st and thereafter. Accommodation options are available (cost not included in tuition fee).

* Opening of the Program is subject to a minimum number of students. The program may be subject to changes.
